This year, the Royal Medical Benevolent Fund celebrated its 180th anniversary. Much has changed over the years, but we have continued to adapt to the needs of a modern medical profession, ensuring that the core principle established at the charity’s founding remains the same: we will provide help to those working in medicine who have the greatest need.

The RMBF has always been led by doctors, and I am always pleased and reassured to work alongside a Board of Trustees that has such depth of medical expertise. However, our most valuable resource is, without a doubt, you. We could not do what we do without the wealth of experience, generosity and love for the medical profession that is brought to bear by our supporters: those who kindly donate, who run fundraising events, give us feedback and suggestions on our work, share our resources online, and of course those who give up their time as Volunteers.

We were all delighted to welcome nearly 100 Volunteers to our 180th Anniversary Conference in Birmingham this June, with kind support from Wesleyan and MDU. As well as celebrating their work, and giving them a chance to meet and socialise with their colleagues from other regions, the event also had a purposeful focus. At a difficult time for medicine, with many doctors at risk of leaving the profession altogether, it is imperative that we put our heads together and find the most effective ways to get our message across, especially to doctors and medical students who are hardest to reach.

A determination to do that really shone through at the Volunteer conference. The day had a tremendous sense of teamwork and collaboration, with everyone keen to contribute ideas. Trustees and staff came away with fresh inspiration on how we should communicate our key messages, and the best ways to make those messages widely heard. I would like to sincerely thank all those who attended for their positivity, their energy and their huge enthusiasm. In view of the success of this conference, we are keen to make it a regular event in future, and I very much look forward to welcoming you all to the next one.

Much of our work over the last year has been shaped by this key goal of reaching out. We have refreshed our communications, relaunching our website to make it easier and faster to seek help or get involved with the charity. Our Vital Signs series of guides now comprises three separate editions, and we’ve designed new leaflets and promotional material to help supporters spread the word. As well as our Volunteer conference, we also welcomed new and long-standing supporters to a celebration event at the Museum of the Order of St John, and we are increasing our own presence at conferences around the country with help from St James’s Place.

All these activities have already led to positive results, and we have been able to help even more doctors in need – a 50% increase in grant expenditure compared with last year shows that our resources really are going where they are truly needed.

I would also like to update you on some of the projects I mentioned in last year’s Annual Review. The relaunch of our Medical Student Programme in April has had a measurable impact on how many students we are reaching. DocHealth, the confidential RMBF and BMA service for doctors suffering with stress and anxiety, has also gone from strength to strength. Over 100 doctors have now self-referred to the service, and we can confirm that we will continue to support the project in the second year of its pilot.

You may also remember last year’s What’s Up Doc? awareness campaign, which achieved significant coverage in the national, local and medical press, helping to spotlight the pressures that so many doctors face in their day-to-day work. In November, we will be launching our second major awareness campaign, Together for Doctors. As well as reiterating the pressures and challenges that doctors face, especially on the front lines of the NHS, the campaign will also celebrate some inspirational medical figures, those who stood up for colleagues and helped make a difference to the welfare of doctors. I hope you will join in the conversation we aim to inspire.

As the pressures on the medical profession increase, I am delighted that the RMBF has been able to rise to these new challenges. I would like to thank the staff in Wimbledon for their hard work, enthusiasm and dedication to helping doctors in need.

I would also like to thank you all for your continued devotion to our cause, your efforts in spreading the word, and your ever-generous support.

Case Study: Stephanie’s Story

“After a brilliant year, I developed back pain which I put down to being on call, playing sport and doing a lot of bending and lifting at work. My GP and I both thought it was a slipped disc but when ibuprofen and physio were no longer enough, I went for a scan and suddenly I was a patient.

“I saw my results on the screen, I knew it wasn’t good.”

Stephanie’s scan showed a sarcoma in her lower back affecting L3, L4 and L5 nerve routes. She had six cycles of chemo and a spent a year in and out of hospital, including a stay in ICU and another for neutropenic sepsis.

However, the tumour didn’t shrink. Surgery became the only option.

“I went in for surgery having been told there was a good chance I would never walk again. I had a laparotomy to remove the tumour, lost three vertebrae and ended up with a spinal bone graft from my fibula and a moss cage.”

Stephanie’s treatment ended in January this year and she has had the ‘all clear’.

Her sarcoma robbed Stephanie of many things but not her ‘survivor personality’: her pride, resilience and determination. She had to give up her flat and move in with her parents, causing the heating bills to soar because the chemo made her feel so cold. Money was tight. She had no savings and there was no spare cash for anything but the bare essentials of life.

“I had to go from wearing a doctor’s hat to a patient’s hat and I hated it, but I learned a lot too. There is no indignity that patients suffer that I don’t know about. Every day, though, I made sure I put my makeup on and showed a brave face. I am still doing that today, and doctors like you have helped make that possible. Thank you.”

Home from hospital and determined to walk again, Stephanie contacted us. Fortunately, we were able to help.

“The RMBF are brilliant. They helped me replace the NHS 30kg wheelchair, which no one could lift, with a light 8kg one that I can lift myself while I work on my walking with and without crutches. They helped with a real-hair wig to replace the synthetic one that kept getting all knotted.”

It’s only with your help that the RMBF can provide aid to doctors like Stephanie when crisis hits. Our thanks to all our supporters who have helped make a difference to doctors’ lives this year and throughout the charity’s history.

The relaunch of the RMBF’s Medical Student Programme, as reported in our Spring newsletter, has already proved successful in reaching more student beneficiaries in need of help.

Early figures for the year 2017-18 show that in the first four months of the financial year, the charity had 82 enquiries from students, compared to 91 for the whole of the previous year. So far, seven students have submitted applications and received direct help from the Grants and Awards Committee, again just shy of last year’s overall total of eight.

Look out for further details in our future newsletters and next year’s Annual Review.
